

ABSTRACT

[40] A method and system provides for automated handling of a service problem reported by a wireless device customer by first identifying the specific nature of the service problem by comparing certain system condition information to a database of known problems, and then initiating a corrective action responsive to the specific nature of the service problem. One such corrective action involves communicating certain computer instructions to one or more switches or other network components to adjust their settings.